

YOUNG PEOPLE AND POLITICS

Study into relationships between young people and politics

The relationship between young people and politics has been conceived in numerous ways depending on the era and social context. In some eras, the notion of the young rebel has predominated in terms of social image, although at the present time, in contrast, the stereotype of the disinterested, individualistic young person would appear to prevail. Leaving to one side any depictions that may provide a univocal standpoint of youth, Ane Larrinaga Renteria, Iker Iraola Arretxe, Onintza Odriozola Irizar, Mila Amurrio Velez, Julen Zabalo Bilbao and Maddalen Epelde Juaristi, members of the Parte Hartuz Research Group at the University of the Basque Country, use qualitative techniques to analyse the political socialization experienced by young people from the Basque Country in all its diversity. The meaning those young people give to politics and the practices pursued within the political sphere of activity are described in detail, based on this analysis and what they recount themselves. ### Within the limits of an era

The Doctor of Philosophy Andoni Olariaga Azkarate analyses the crises of the post-modern eras from a historical, philosophical and political standpoint, viewing this from the perspective of the Basque Country. The author analyses the unease and myths surrounding post-modernity and the influence they have over debates among current new generations. Andoni Olariaga Azkarate

Commitment in these times of crisis. Aitana Agirre, Iñigo Etxezarreta, Izar Hernando, Unai Martinez and Naiara Rodriguez

«What do young people know?». It would appear that they don't care, they're not willing to take decisions about social issues. And so, do they have anything to say? In reality, many things – about society, about youth and about their political participation. Aitana Agirre Loiarde (EGI), Iñigo Etxezarreta Toca (LGTBIQ+ movement), Izar Hernando Ibero (Ernai), Unai Martinez Crespo (GKS) and Naiara Rodriguez Garayar (feminist movement) conduct a wide-ranging analysis of all these issues at a round table moderated by Ander Barandiaran Ziordia, technician for the Youth Parliament of Navarre.
